

Korea Food Security Research Foundation (www.foodsecurity.or.kr)

KFSRF is an independent research institute established in April 2010 to assess global food problems, forecast their impact on Korean food security, and lead the policy-making and national campaign to raise people's awareness on the issue in preparation for a global food crisis. The foundation makes strenuous efforts to develop new food policies and considers the agro-fisheries and food industry as the principal agents of stability in the country's food supply. The foundation is working to strengthen the food security function of the food industry in particular and encourages the industry to fulfill its social responsibility. It develops and carries out research projects on food security, publishes books and collects and shares relevant data with the support of voluntary sponsors. As the driver of the National Movement for Food Self-sufficiency, the foundation fosters a national campaign to pass down a society free from food shortage to the next generation. Sikanyeon is the publishing house of the foundation.
